Willis is the may man ever sent abroad by an American Administration to overthrow a shifte man a government and set up a Jellow "oman's government—the only one ever instructed to depose a President and set up a monarch if he was a little awkward about the tank, something should be forgiven on account of the awkward ness of the undertaking

Willis was several times surprised. He thought his secret justructions from the State Department had really been private He found Her Majesty July acquainted with them The British imparted the good news to Her Magnificence. The President of the Government to which he was accordited, and which it was his policy to destroy, was allowed to remain in ignorance. The Cleve-land-Greslium plot was carried on in Willis was soon fitted up with telephones, the wires leading to the Queen's Boarding House and the United States can of war Philadelphia. He had a visit from Wilson, the ex-Queen's ex-Marshal, with a memorandum, showing that the "secret" policy had leaked into the royal circle. Wilson had drawn up a policy, beaming with murder and confiscation and exile. The Provisionals, to whom Wilson was accredited, were to be executed, their property configurated and their children exiled. All this was necording to the le ter of the constitution and the will of her Majesty. Willie was refusing to the government to which he was accredited the information that was their due. He would not even tell the royalist rumors were true, tHe cal el ut the ex Queen and got from her a fu statement of her bloody and in all repects parbarous designs, and at last obtained her signatures to a perfunctory ntional promise of mercifulness.

Armed with this provision for a lacken promise as he had been warned the royal constitution was straight against merpy, he demanded the surrender to the Royalists of the Provisionals, whose critic had een admiration of, and a struggle for annexation to, the Huited States. He made this demand when the Wilson memorandum told him the Queen's plan was to subordinate the policy when our President had restored her to power, to Busish med and methods rather than those

All this time the Queen and her ad-

matter They took it for granted that the President would order the warship to overtheow the Provisionals and re-establish he throne. That was the implication, as strong as a proclamation, and pursuant to the Cleveland cohaptrary will declared denial He was probably expected to take the responsi-form the most important contribution to an understanding of Dominion interests and policies that has recently appeared in particular that has recently appeared in particular literature. The chief topic of editorial discussion in the Review of Perviews for Aigust is the recent railroad strike. The motives of the dispute are considered, and the conclusion is reached that the lenders of the American Railway Union have done great harm to the cause of organized labor, besides inflicting untold injury on an innocent public. Among the important topics editorially treated in "The Progress of the World department age the recent railroad strike and its results, the assassination of President Carnot, the new President of France, the doings of the German Emperor, the vecto of the new President of France, the doing? of the German Emperor, the veto of the British Peers, the British budget and the electrons, and the personalities of the late Lord Chief Justice Coleridge and his successor, Sir. A STUBBORN WOMAN.

We read that when Jove had the ordering of mundane affairs, he promised to send rain on any day that would be agreed upon by the whole world. It was reported at last that they were all ready for rain at a certain date, except one old woman who wanted to make sone on that particular day. Women are often accused of being capricious and whinsleal; but there is one point on which they will all agose—the desirability of being well, and locking well. Livery woman, being by young or old, always wants to look her best; and in order to do this, it is necessary, to attain that stafe of health which will impart a sparille to her eye, a bloom to her cheek, and grace and symmetry to her entire form. A strange thing happened at the old fort during the still watches of the hight. Even now, at 9 in the morning, no one seemed to be in possession of the exact circumstances. The officer of the day was engaged in an investigation, and all that appeared to be generally known was the hald statement that the shown was the anial statement that the sentry on No. 5 had, fired at somebody or other about half after B; that he had fired by order of the officer of the day, who was on his post at the time, and that now he firstly refused to talk about the metric.

the desk, balanced unsteadily on one leg and with his hands sticking in his tronsers pockets, and his forage cap swinging from protruding thumb and forefinger, cleared his throat, and with marked lack of confidence accosted his absorbed superior:

'Colonel gone home?'

'Didn't you see him?'' was the uncompromising reply, and the captain did not deign to raise his head or eyes. "Well—er—yes, I suppose I did," said Mr Hall, shifting uncomfortably Garrison curiosity, it is perhaps needless to say, was rather stimulated than fulled by this announcement. An un-isual number of officers were chatting about headquarters when Colonel May-said at Hall, shifting uncomfortably to his other, leg and prodding the floor with the toe of his book. "Then that wasn't what you wanted to know, I presume," said Captain Chesten, signing his name with a vicious dab of the pen and bringing his fist down withla thump on the blotting pad, while he who had all around in his choir and o wheeled around in his chair and features of the junior.

"No, it wasn't," answered Mr. Hall in hi highered too, while an audible sittlers at the door added to his sense of discourior.

"What I mainly wanted was to know if features of the property of the waste known if features are the sense of the waste known if features in the sense of the sense of the waste known if features in the sense of the s

All you have to do is to got out of that uncomfortable and unsoldierly position, studd in the attitude in which you are certainly more at home and in-finitely more picturesque, proffer your request in respectful words, and there is no question as to the result."

"Oh, you're in command, then?" said Mr. Hall, slowly wriggling into the position of the soldier and flushing through his brouzed cheeks. "I thought the colins ordinate cases. "Inought the colo-bel might be only gone for a minute,"

"The colonel may not be back for a week, but you be here for dress parade all the same, and—Mr. Hall!" he call-ed as the young officer was turning away. The latter faced about again.

"Was Mr. Jerrold going with you to dogeart, and it's over here now. "Mr. Jerrold cannot go—at least not until I have seen him."

'Why, captain, he got the colonel's permission at breakfast this morning."
"That is true, no doubt, Mr. Hall."
And the captain dropped his sharp and captions manner and his voice fell on though in sympathy with the cloud that settled on his face. "I cannot explain matters just now. There are reasons why the pormission is withdrawn for the time being. The adjutant will noti-fy him." And Captain Chester turned and baker fromitown, theold milk woman with her glistening cans, had all served as newsmongers from kitchen to kitchen, and the story that came in with the coffee to the lady of the house had lost nothing in bulk or bravery. The groups of officers chatting and smoking in front of headquarters gained accessions everymoment, while the ladies seemed more absorbed in chat and confidences than in the sweet music of the band. to his dask again as the new officer of the day, gunrilbook in hand, entered to make his report. "The usual orders, captain," said

Chester as he took the book from his hand and tooked over the list of prison-ers. Then, in bold and rapid strokes, by the wrote across the page the customary certificate of the old officer of the day, winding up with this remark:
"He also inspected guard and visited sentrics between 3 and 3:35 a.m. The firing at 3:30 a.m. was by his order."

Two or three mentioned some routine mattern that required the action of the post commander, but did so reluctantly, as though they preferred to await the orders of the column himself. Captain Wilton judeed spoke his senting "I wanted to see Colonel Maynard about getting two men of my company relieved from extra duty, but as he isn't here I fancy I had better wait."

The group was apparently "nonplused," as the adjutant afterward put it, by such unlooked for complacence on the part of the usually crotchety senior captain. Still, no one offered to lead moment's nervous rapping with his knuckles on the desk Captain Chester again abruptly spoke:

For pressing personal reasons he has turned over the command to me, and if he decide to remain away of equase some field officer will be ordered to some to headquarters. For a release to the conductant of th feeted he certainly was. Never before had his cheery voice denied them a cordial "Good morning, gentlemen." Never before had his blue eyes flinched: He had been their compade and commander in verse of feeting and commander in years of frontier service, and his bachelor home had been the rendezvous another nome and seen the rendezvous of all genial spirits when in garrison. They had missed him sorely when he went abroad on long leave the provious year and were almost indignant when ordered to come to headquarters. For a day or two you will have to worry along with me, but I sha'n't worry you and more than I can help. I've got mystery and mischief enough here to keep me busy, God knows. Just ask Sloat to come back here to me, will you? And, Wilton, I did not mean to be abrupt with you. I'm all upset today. Mr. Adhata, notify Mr. Jerroid at once that he must not leave the nost mill be. ried. "Sho" was the widow of a wealthy New Yorker who had been dead some three years only, and though over 40 did not look her years to masou-line eyes when she remohed the fort in May.

After knowing her a week the garriam had decided to a man that the colomel had done wisely. Mrs. Maynard was charming, counteous, handsome and accomplished. Only among the women were there still a few who resented their relocation appears and some advanced their he must not leave the post until I have seen him. It is the colonel's last order. Tell him so."

There are colonel's capture, and some of these, ob-livious of the fact that they had tempt-ad him with relations of their own, were hylons of the race that they had tempred him with relations of their own, were sententions and severe in their condemnation of second marriage, for the colonel, 600 was indulging in a second experiment. Of his first only one man in the regiment heades the commander could tell mything, and he, to the just indignation of almost everybody, would not discuss the subjects. It was rumored that in the old day when Maynard was senior captain and Chester-innior subaltern in their farmer regiment the two had very little in common. It was known that the first Mar. Maynard, while still young and banutifal, had died abroad. It was hinted that the resignation of a dashing licutemant of the regiment; which was synchronous with her departure for foreign shores, was demanded by his brother officers, but it was useless osking Captain Chester.
